Meet Our Family Medicine Residents

Samuel Anderson-Been, MD Class of 2024

Hello! My name is Sam Anderson-Been, and I am excited to be a resident physician at Deaconess. I was raised in rural Indiana and grew up watching my father practice family medicine. I studied Building and Construction Management at Purdue University and worked in construction management for two years before pursuing medical school at Ross University.

During medical school, I had opportunities to rotate throughout the country, but I immediately felt at home during my rotation at Deaconess. The residents, staff and attendings are genuinely passionate about teaching and go above and beyond to serve their patients. I was drawn to Evansville because it has a small-town feel, yet is able to provide exceptional care for a diverse range of patients from all across the tri-state area.

Family medicine is my dream because I can be an advocate for all types of patients throughout their entire lifespan, from a newborn check to geriatric care. I am interested in practicing broad-spectrum rural family medicine, including hospital medicine and procedural training, while maintaining a strong clinical practice.

Outside of medicine, I enjoy spending time with my wife and two young daughters, woodworking, gardening and working on home improvement projects.
